San Juan County, New Mexico: An Ideal Agricultural Section With Plenty (Classic Reprint) Granville Pendleton

San Juan County occupies the northwestern corner of the Territory of New Mexico. It is bounded on the north by La Plata County, Colorado; on the west by Arizona, on the south by McKinley County and on the east by Rio Arriba County, New Mexico. The government monument which marks its northwestern corner also marks the corner of New Mexico, Arizona, Utah and Colorado. It is adjacent to one of the richest mining belts in the United States and its present distributing point is Durango, just across the Colorado line. AREA. San Juan County is an empire in itself. It covers 5,742 square miles, or to be more exact, 3,697,000 acres, of which 1,958,400 acres are included in the Navajo Indian Reservation; 1,475,000 acres are subject to entry under the federal land laws; about 260,000 acres have been appropriated, and about 300,000 acres are irrigable. The county is four and one-half times as large as the State of Rhode Island; three times as large as Delaware, and contains 900 square miles more than the State of Connecticut. TOPOGRAPHY.

Topographically, the county, or at least the irrigable portion of it, viewed from above, presents the appearance of a basin surrounded on all sides with mountains and high ridges, with a deep notch cut into one side through which the San Juan River flows. The county is not mountainous, but is located in the foothills, on the mesas and in the valleys of the gigantic mountain masses to the north in Colorado. Some of its hills, however, rise to a considerable altitude. Outside of the river valleys and the upper mesas, which are broad and level, the county consists of a series of double lands broken by arroyos and generally composed of fertile soil upon which the native grasses grow luxuriantly. The altitude ranges from 5,100 to 5,800 feet. On the La Plata, in the La Plata Valley, extending to the San Juan River, is a large body of land (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and don't occur in the book.)
