Graded Lessons in Macramé, Knotting and Netting Louisa Walker

This book by a well-known British educator who successfully taught macramé and knotwork to generations of future Victorian housewives, is one of the basic books on 19th-century string techniques, including netting, knotwork and macramé. Designed for self-study, it is extremely thorough and clear in its descriptions of techniques and processes, and profusely illustrated with both technique-diagrams and pictures of interesting objects that can be made. It is also unusual among craft books in being graded or progressively arranged: the author first presents elementary and basic operations, ideas and objects that even a child can follow and make, then gradually works up through the very elaborate projects that were the delight of the Victorian living room. As a result of this approach, even if you have never made macramé before, you will find it quite accessible.
